

RETAIL MARKET OVERVIEW

MACYN SCHOLZ, Director of Research

Consumers were still battling a decrease in purchasing power over Q3, as both inflation and interest rates increased. Although some have been cutting back on non-essential shopping, retail spending was still up this summer compared to summer of 2021. Metro Vancouver also encountered a 2-week liquor strike in August, which saw liquor stores and restaurants face a limited supply of alcohol, negatively affecting sales. While vacancy remains low and retail space stays in demand, the retail market in Vancouver has yet to take a downturn. However, the effects of inflation and interest rates are expected to be felt further as shoppers tighten up spending even more and retail sales slow over the next few quarters.
